CHAPTER IV.

Duncan's Plan of Revenge.
UNCAN drew Boyd to one side after the blustering scene in which Brand left the Boyd home.

"I have a most delicate matter to bring before you," he said slowly.
"What is it?" queried Boyd.
Duncan hesitated.

"I—I— he stammered.
"What's the matter, man? Speak up," prompted Boyd. "I never saw you so undecided and nervous before." Duncan drew in a deep breath.

"Well, Emmerson," he at last managed to say, "I love your daughter. I want to marry her." Boyd drew back. To say that he was startled would hardly describe his emotions.

"Well, of all things!" he exclaimed.
"Why, man, I thought you too sensible a person to even think of dropping your luxurious life of bachelor's ease."
"No, I don't want to be sensible if that means giving up Eleanor. I love her. I think she cares for me."

"How about Brand, I wonder?" said Boyd thoughtfully. "He's got the inside track, I fear, and I must spoil his plans. If Eleanor married him I would disinherit her."

"Will you consent to let me ask Eleanor?"
After a pause:
"Yes."

Duncan's face lightened.
"All right. Bless you for those words. I'll ask her now. She is—"
"No," interrupted Boyd. "There is a condition attached to my consent."

"Put the Claron absolutely and completely out of business first." Duncan's face beamed.
"Leave that to me. It will be done in two days."

Boyd received some very irritating information but little later. The mayor called him up and notified him that he was considering the application of the Anti-tuberculosis society for a tuberculosis sanatorium.

"What shall I do about it?" asked the timid old politician. "I want to please you."

"It will hurt my business," was the stern reply. "Don't consider the idea for a moment. If I had known that you were going to grant those doctors a hearing I would have prevented it."

Eleanor came toward Duncan.
"You are responsible for that insult to Mr. Brand."

Duncan flushed. He protested to the contrary, then turned from her.
He went into Boyd's library, where Detective Mooney had been awaiting him, and whispered:

"Where can I find a couple of real, fearless gangsters? I have a job that will require thoroughly desperate men —men who will stop at nothing." Mooney answered quickly:

"Simplest kind of a matter," in easy tones. "Over at 'Bull' Finnegan's gin joint. His back room is the Sunday school chapel for the finest bunch of dips, second story workers, yeggmen and gun toters in the city. Every one of 'em carries a Gat, and they're all done a bit of five or more in silk."

"You can get stickup men enough there, in Finnegan's back room, any day or any night to do whatever dirty work you want," advised the detective.
"I know," he added, "for it is part of my business to know these things. I have worked for bigger men in my time than you are, Mr. Duncan, and I know what I am talking about. Give your men $50 and they are yours till the job is over."

The crime sodden sleuth, Mooney, was right in his statements. It required Duncan a remarkably short time, considering all the circumstances, to make his desired arrangements.

After three glasses of mixed port and beer in Finnegan's the notorious "Whitey" Blake and the police suspect "Rambler" Roonan agreed to dynamite the Claron office at the time that Duncan should give them the word.

"Sure, we're game to th' finish, boss, an' we'll see youse through on this little job," explained Roonan as he pocketed the money. "We're like Chinamen hereabouts. We sez, sez we, wot's th' use o' worryin' about whether you die today or some futur' time? Wot difference do a few years make?"

Duncan rumbled hoarsely at his new found aids to show his domination over them.

"This is a big job, and I'll meet you at the right hand corner of the alley opening to the rear of the Claron office tomorrow evening at 10 o'clock.
You guys must not fail me." He handed Roonan a heavy bundle. It was a dynamite bomb with a time fuse, and it was wrapped in a piece of heavy felt-ing, such as hatmakers use.

Saco-Ozone and Multikroil must be protected by any possible means, fair or foul, and Duncan was the man to see that the necessary protection materIALIZED. What cared he so long as the end justified the means? He was employed to see that something was done.

"He himself had been in Boyd's laboratory, but what did it mean to him if he had seen a chemist putting opium in Saco-Ozone?"

Also, what was about to happen to the Claron office would be a lesson to any other newspaper that tried to trespass on the vested rights of property?

While the plotters of death and ruin were consummating their dastardly plans Eleanor was highly wrought up over the forced exit of Brand from her home. The next morning after Matthew had been driven out of the house by her father she visited the Claron building and was immediately ushered into Brand's office.

"It seems to be that you cannot come to my home any more," she said shyly, "but that does not mean that I must not visit your publishing house." Brand, overjoyed at her presence, forgot completely that he was in the midst of a scorching article denouncing Eleanor's father for preventing the founding of a tuberculosis sanatorium.

"Your visit here means more to me than I can tell," was Matthew Brand's response to the girl's statement. "I thought—perhaps—he faltered—"that I would never see you—again."

As Matthew bent and kissed Eleanor's hand the millionaire's stenographers rose, scuttled their feet loudly and fumbled with some letters.

Brand gently released Eleanor's hand and stated that he would send her a message the next day by one of his trusted clerks, who would deliver it to no one but herself. She departed and as she disappeared through the doorway threw a kiss to the stalwart young man who had dared throw down the gauntlet to her father, Emmerson Boyd, and Duncan, master of the Chemical company and friend of the underworld.

A lesson of life is that at frequent intervals the things about which we care the most are the first to suffer or be destroyed. On Eleanor's return home from the Claron office the weakness in her chest, which she had felt increasing for days, but had concealed from her father, became more no-

Great Advertising Parade for Chautaqua—Mr. Vail Entertained Telephone and Telegraph Men.

(Mrs. E. J. Blodgett, correspondent.) An attractive parade of 32 automobiles, all decorated with Chautaqua flags and banners made a trip to St. Johnsbury and returned last Thursday afternoon for the purpose of advertising the coming Chautauqua week, which begins today. The past week has been devoted to selling tickets in this and surrounding towns, the members of the committees striving hard to see which will make the greatest success. The Congregational Church bell was tolled as returns came in, showing the amount of hustling that was done by the ticket sellers during the campaign.

Mr. Vail entertained a large party of telephone and telegraph officials at Speedwell Farms over Sunday and most of the party took a motor trip to his fish pond at Groton.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Waterman, Miss Mary Towne, Mr. and Mrs.
Grover Foster, Mr. and Mrs. L. F.
Finnegan were among the local people who spent Sunday at Willoughby lake.

Dr. F. E. Dwinell has sold his drug business which he has carried on for 30 years to F. G. Landry.
Genge Asselin and Joseph Legendre of St. Johnsbury. The last named will take charge of the store which will continue to be known as the Dwinell Pharmacy. Mr. Dwinell's plans are uncertain.

A. Gerry Boldgett is now at work for Joshua Bemis, driving his Cadillac car and caring for it.

Prof. G. A. Jamieson has bought an automobile which will be of use to him in his work as school supervisor. He expects to move to West Burke in September, as that is a more central location for his district.
People here very much regret to have the Jamiesons leave both the town and the school. His successor in the graded school has not yet been elected.

The Rev. and Mrs. James Hutchinson are spending the month of August at the Maine beaches, going by motor.

J. F. Jock has bought the Shurt-leff place on the East Burke road which he has been occupying for the past year.

Mrs. Carrie (Weeks) Severance, who is in very poor health, is staying at present with Mrs. L. M. Paton on South street, the nurse, who is caring for her. Mrs. Paton has but just returned from Boston, Me., where she has been assisting in the advent of a new comer in the family of her son, Harry Paton, a former resident here.

Miss Genevieve King of Evansville comes this week to spend a short time with her aunt, Mrs. W. L.
Gould. Her father, William King, who recently died, the home is sold, and the family plans are undecided.

Mr. and Mrs. Benton R. Lyster and three children of Whitefield, N.
H., were visitors in town last week, coming by automobile.

Several from here attended the German whist party which was given at the Lyndon Tea Shoppe last Thursday evening. The first prize, a bottle of maple syrup, was won by Miss Stanton; the booby, a bag of peanuts, by Mrs. Charles Hale.

Mrs. Milo Shattuck and Marion have returned frombury, P. Q., where Mrs. Shattuck has been assisting in the care of her father, who is very ill. Howard Shattuck will remain for a longer time.

Mrs. E. J. Blodgett, with Miss Ruth Blodgett and Miss Velma Darling, spent a part of last week at the Bungalow Inn at Lake Morey.

Mr. and Mrs. Ertion A. Shorey and son have returned from a pleasant automobile trip of two weeks, during which they visited Portland and the Maine beaches and motored along the New England coast, southward, taking in glimpses of many of the delightful summer resorts in this section, and returning via the Connecticut valley.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Dodge and Theresa motored to Ely last week and called on Mr. Dodge's sister, then to Lake Morey where Dr. Fred and Miss Addie Dodge have taken a cottage for the month of August.

Mrs. Joseph S. Schofield has gone to visit friends in Ogdensburg, N. Y., for a vacation of two weeks. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Locke, will stay with their other daughter, Mrs. B. F. Eaton, during her absence.

Miss Rosabel Allen of Elizabeth, N. J., who is stopping with Mrs. H.
L. Parker, spent last week with Dr. and Mrs. Richard Wilder in their camp at Forest Lake, between Littleton and Whitefield, N. H.

Miss Irene Stinson left the first of the week for a month's vacation, most of which she will spend with her brother at Winthrop Beach and vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Ferguson have been camping in the Powers cottage at Willoughby Lake for a week with their son, Dr. George Ferguson and wife who are here from Toronto, O.
On Saturday the family all went to the Twin Mountain House to visit the other brother, Phil, who is there for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Hutchinson and Miss Bess moved last week from rooms in Mrs. John Cleary's house to the house on Main street formerly the home of the late Mrs. Sumner S.
Thompson.

Mrs. W. L. Guild has begun making quite extensive repairs and alterations in her house, Harold Towne having charge of the work. She will have the roof of the ell raised so as to make a commodious room there, to be destroyed. On Eleanor's return home from the Claron office the weakness in her chest, which she had felt

Mrs. James Shores and daughter, Venita, have been in Bernardston, Mass., for a few days. Miss Shores is to teach in the high school there this coming year. Mr. Shores is working in West Burke.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Holbrook and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Croft motored to Lake Willoughby Sunday in the the Holbrook's new car.

Mr. and Mrs. Elsie Bigelow go this week to Chicago, where they will spend two or three weeks with Mrs. Bigelow's brother, Harry House and family.

Mrs. Mary Smith of West Burke spent last week in town.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Campbell have been entertaining her sister, Mrs.
L. H. Noyes, and son, Lucius, of Hyde Park.

Mrs. Leroy S. Howe is visiting relatives in Bellows Falls and Boston for a few weeks.

At a recent special village meeting Robert Stockwell was elected village trustee in the place of the late W. I. Powers.

George Simpson of Danville has bought the Edward Aldrich farm on Pudding Hill, and Charles H. Brown has bought the Elias B. Deoss farm on the Smith Wheelock road.

Mrs. Flora Griswold has recently been visiting her son, Russell Griswold.

Several members of the Mothers' Circle held a basket picnic with Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Mathewson at their place in Wheelock Thursday.

WEST BURKE
Death of Miss Jessie Dearborn—Personals and Locals.

(Mrs. H. L. Walter, correspondent.) Miss Jessie Dearborn died at her home in Newport Friday morning at 10 o'clock. Her health began to fail about six months ago and continued in a steady decline until the end. The funeral service was held at her home in Newport Sunday at 2:30.
